Missionary Land Grabbers.

A certain M. M. Gower has written to The Sacred Heart-Review denouncing the statement lately made in a Monitor editorial that the band of American missionaries in Hawaii accumulated more than twice four hundred thousand acres there in less than a century. He says the statement is born of ignorance and its author is challenged to show that the American missionaries ever owned or controlled one-tenth part of that amount of land, and the records of the Land Office are free to him to inspect. We are not prepared to take a trip to Hawaii for that purpose, but are ready to furnish satisfactory proof that members of the body known as the "missionary colony or band" have controlled for their own use very much more than eight hundred thousand acres of Hawaiian land.

The History of Hawaii published by the Government of the last King for use in the public schools, makes the statement that in 1841 the firm of Ladd & Co. received from the native Government, then under full control of its missionary teachers, the right to take up all the unoccupied lands of the islands, at a nominal rental. The Rev. Mr. Richards, who had come to Hawaii as a missionary minister of the Gospel, and had in a short time changed that function for the salaried position of minister of public instruction, became a member of the firm of Ladd & Co. at the same time, as the History states. The extent of the "unoccupied" lands thus placed under control of the Rev. Mr. Richards, and subsequently transferred to another land company, was little less than one-third of the whole area of the islands.

The missionary ministers of the native King induced him, in 1840, to divide the land into three parts. One was to be the private estate of the King, a second to be divided as private property among the chiefs, and a third might be allotted in small patches to the common natives. According to the statement of Dr. Anderson, the historian of the American Board of Missions, less than twenty-seven thousand acres was divided among the latter class. As there are four and a half million acres in the islands, and a third, or a million and a half, was set out as peoples' land, of which only twenty-seven thousand was allotted to the people, it seems clear that the grant of all unoccupied lands to the Rev. Mr. Richards and his partners must have exceeded fourteen hundred thousand acres. This single fact establishes the accuracy of The Monitor's statement, unless the right to take land at a nominal rent, is not regarded as either ownership or control, or that a missionary who ceases to teach the Gospel is not to be considered a member of the missionary band.

With acquisitions made by other clerical speculators, such as the estate of Punahou, acquired from the Chief Boki in 1830, by the Rev. Hiram Bingham, and afterwards transferred to the missionary college of Oahu, we shall not trouble our readers. They were neither few nor small, but the list is too long for our columns. We will, however, refer to the last
